Research

Using Neural Machine Translation to Complete Cicero's Timaeus University of Puget Sound, funded by McCormick Scholarship Using Cicero's half-completed translation and other texts Cicero translated from Greek to Latin as training sets, this research project aims to create a neural network that will produce a machine-translation of the incomplete portions of Cicero's translation of Timaeus using English as a pivot language and preserving the persona of Socrates from Plato's texts.	Summer 2018
"Just Not Feeling It Today": Cancellation Trends and Policies in the Writing Center Center for Writing, Learning, and Teaching, University of Puget Sound This study will assess data concerning cancelled appointments, revealing trends in the typical times of cancellations and the types of students who are more likely to cancel appointments. This assessment will be used to reflect on cancellation policies and how writing centers can decrease the rate of cancelled appointments.	Summer 2018
Digression Architecture of Herodotus VI University of Puget Sound, Co-authors: Kathryn Stutz and Marcelle Rutherford Created a graph that shows the architecture of digressions in Herodotus' Histories Book VI and allows detailed exploration of the structure of the narrative, which is characterized by multi-level digressions on not only historical topics, but also genealogical, mythical, ethnographic, and linguistic concerns. Located online at http://digitalhumanities.pugetsound.edu/lamar_greek/ .	Fall 2017
Becoming Augustine: A Network Graph of Texts of Plato to Augustine University of Puget Sound, funded by the Richard Bangs-Collier Interdisciplinary Research Award Created a network graph that showed connections between the texts of Augustine, the neo-Platonian writers read by Augustine, Plato, and Biblical sources quoted by Augustine in order to show the history of Augustine's ideas, especially regarding free will and original sin. Located online at mathcs.pugetsound.edu/projects/Augustine .	Summer 2017
Towards a Database for Scholarship on Classical Receptions of Sci-Fi and Fantasy University of Puget Sound, funded by the Mellon Grant for Digital Humanities Created a database to hold citations to scholarship for the field of Classical Receptions of Sci-Fi and Fantasy. Found and catalogued articles, blogs, and other publications to include in the database.	Summer 2017
